Before joining Bridge of Hope, Nayr says she had “a huge trusting problem.” “I always try to have this shield and act like I’m this hard, tough cookie, but I know that I’m really not,” she said. “So when I opened up to my neighboring volunteers, I learned that it’s okay to let people in, and they’re not gonna hurt you.”

“I’m able to trust even my coworkers, just like I was able to trust some of my neighboring volunteers,” she said. “My job … offered me a leadership position…. I never saw that coming, but I started showing that I cared about myself and what I was doing and my job, and I think that it made a huge impact.”

Bridge of Hope Neighboring Volunteers, 6-10 volunteers from a local church or Bible study, can enhance a family’s support network and can create life-changing opportunities for a family facing homelessness. By having reliable, caring interactions with people who prove themselves to be trust-worthy, relationships can begin to diminish the impact of trauma.

Being homeless does not just mean losing one’s house; it means losing your security, privacy, sense of control and more. For women and children, like Nayr and her daughter, it can often mean learning to trust other people, after a life-time of broken relationships and lack of supports. Being alone without support can be very traumatic.
